Making Inferences Practice

WHAT YOU SEE	WHAT YOU CAN INFER
A man walks into a room all soaking wet, holding a newspaper over his head.
You walk into a classroom and find the teacher sitting at the desk with red, puffy eyes and a drippy nose. She is coughing and clutching a box of tissues. She is wearing a blanket and shivering even though it's at least seventy degrees in the room.
Every day when you walk by, the same guy is hanging out around the same girl's locker. While she gets her stuff out of her locker, she giggles a lot. He never looks directly at her, and he mutters a lot when he talks to her.
